

Lansing State Journal

LOCAL

Here are 11 MSU employees who AG's office said knew of Nassar's abuse, but didn't report it

Kara Berg Lansing State Journal

Published 11:10 a.m. ET Dec. 21, 2018 | Updated 2:42 p.m. ET Dec. 27, 2018

LANSING — The Michigan Attorney General's Office listed the names of 11 Michigan State University employees who were told about Larry Nassar's abuse but failed to report it to authorities.

They received complaints from 1997 to 2015, and their names were included in the Attorney General's Office report detailing the findings of the investigation into MSU's handling of sexual assault complaints against Nassar.

Read more:

Lansing State Journal

Of the 280 survivors interviewed for the investigation, 13 said they reported Nassar's abuse to a MSU employee at or near the time it was happening. Some of the employees also were under investigation by the Department of Licensing and Regulatory Affairs (LARA).

Here's who was named:

Gary Stollak, MSU professor and psychologist, was told by Kyle Stephens in 1998 that Nassar had abused her. Stollak has lost his license for not reporting the abuse. He was called to testify at Nassar's preliminary hearing, but said he could not remember anything after having a stroke.

Kathie Klages, MSU gymnastics coach, was told by Larissa Boyce and a second young gymnast about Nassar's abuse in the late 1990s. Klages has been charged with four counts of lying to police in connection to this.

Heena Shah Trivedi, an athletic trainer, was told by Tiffany Thomas Lopez in 1999.

Kelli Bert, an MSU track coach, was told by Christie Achenbach in 1999.

Lianna Hadden, an athletic trainer, was told by Jennifer Bedford in 2000 or 2001 that Bedford was not comfortable with Nassar's treatment. Trivedi also told Hadden about Lopez's report in 1999. Hadden still works at MSU as an athletic trainer. She is still under investigation by LARA.

Tony Robles, an athletic trainer, was told by an athlete in 2002. The woman told investigators Robles "seemed concerned," but she assured Robles everything was fine.

Brooke Lemmen, an MSU doctor, was told by Kassie Castle in 2007 that she was uncomfortable with Nassar's treatments. Another young girl told Lemmen the same thing, and Lemmen said "we get that a lot." She resigned from a university job in 2017. LARA cleared her in their investigation.

Lionel Rosen, an MSU sports psychiatrist, was told by Shannon Dunn in 2010. Rosen "expressed no concern" and told Dunn that Nassar was only doing what was best for her.

Rebecca Cass, a supervisor in the MSU College of Osteopathic Medicine, was told by Catryina Brown that Nassar had abused her.

Lansing State Journal

Destiny Teachnor-Hauk, an MSU trainer who was given Nassar's assignments after he was fired, was told by Lopez and cautioned her that filing a report would put a burden on Lopez, her family and MSU. Teachnor-Hauk was also one of the four medical experts used in the 2014 Title IX investigation of Nassar, and said she'd never heard a complaint about Nassar.

A twelfth employee, Jeffrey Kovan, was listed in the report, but he referred Amanda Thomashow's 2014 report about Nassar to the Title IX office. Kovan, the team doctor for MSU's basketball, soccer, track and softball teams, was cleared in LARA's investigation.

Read more:

'I told Michigan State University,' Woman says at Larry Nassar sentencing

Nassar victims: Response from MSU, USA Gymnastics 'heartbreaking'

Lawsuit: George Perles intervened after Nassar accused of drugging, raping athlete in 1992

Contact Kara Berg at 517-377-1113 or kberg@lsj.com. Follow her on Twitter @karaberg95.

CLARIFICATION: This article has been updated to remove the name of a sexual assault victim who has not chosen to be public but whose name was listed in the Attorney General's Office report.